

Emily van der Meulen is a doctoral candidate in Women's Studies at York University, Toronto. Her research area is sex work, labour organizing and decriminalization. She is also a board member of Canada's oldest sex worker run education project, Maggie's: The Toronto Prostitutes' Community Service Project.

Jaclyn Mallan has an M.A. in English Literature from the University of Central Florida with an emphasis on Modern and postmodern fiction and poetry of Europe and the Americas.

Lynda L. Hinkle attends Rutgers University School of Law in Camden. She has an MS in Teaching from Rowan University and is completing her MA in English at Rutgers University. She has presented papers at national conferences and received a number of awards for her presentations and research.

Ms. Maria Angelica de Leon Relucio is a PhD. Candidate at National University of Singapore, Singapore. Her major field of concentration is Feminism and Third World Women Studies and her minor field of concentration is Classical Chinese Philosophy. Expected date of Graduation: 2008

Shawna Lipton received her MA in English from Portland State University specializing in Modernism, Women's Literature, and Critical Theory. She is an instructor of Rhetoric and Composition and an active member of the feminist and queer community supporting local nonprofit organizations SMYRC and The Rock and Roll Camp for Girls.

Stephanie Marchese earned two Masters Degrees in Gender/Cultural Studies and Teaching from Simmons College in Boston, as well as a B.A. in history from the University of Georgia, her home state. She is a certified secondary History teacher in Massachusetts. She presents at various national conferences on subjects of race, privilege, human rights advocacy, queer violence, and what she terms the Lost Femme in today's queer communities. Blending her theoretical background with current pedagogical concerns, Marchese seeks to shake up the American classroom. She is currently conducting research in the field of queer pedagogy, various forms of identity formation and the public interactions between subversive adult and young adult concepts of sexuality and behavior. Marchese has most recently become active in public policy testifying at the Massachusetts State House on bills relating to school district reform and is now a prime member in the Massachusetts Advocates for Children's Trauma and Learning Policy Initiative.