

About the Contributors:

Jeff Carr

Jeff Carr joined the faculty at Indiana State University in the fall of 2011 after previously teaching at Vincennes University and Western Kentucky University. His primary research focus is Mark Twain, but he also has a great interest in Renaissance literature, American Modernism, literary Marxism, and feminist studies.

Emily Ennis

Emily Ennis currently holds the John Barnard Scholarship for her MA in English Literature at The University of Leeds. She also received her first class undergraduate degree in English from Leeds. Her main research interests are Critical/Cultural Theory and its intersections with literature and culture of the Victorian period.

Justine Gieni

Justine Gieni is a Ph.D. candidate of English at the University of Saskatchewan. She received her Master's degree and Bachelor's degree in English from the University of Regina. Her current research involves the study of narratives of sexual violence, with particular focus on representations of hyper-masculinity and male hysteria.

Lydia McDermott

Lydia McDermott is currently a Visiting Assistant Professor in Women's and Gender Studies at Ohio University. Her primary interest is the intersection of gender, sexuality, rhetoric, and writing. She is also a poet.

Roxanne Naseem Rashedi

Roxanne Naseem Rashedi writes fiction, poetry, and literary criticism. She specializes in gender and sexuality studies and twentieth century American literature and poetry. Her teaching interests include developmental writing, critical thinking, creative writing, and twentieth century American literature and poetry. Roxanne also teaches yoga and is interested in the intersection between creative writing and yoga.