

About the Contributors:

Tom Dreyfus

Tom Dreyfus received his LLB (Hons) and BA from the University of Melbourne in 2011. He is currently completing an Honours thesis at the University of Melbourne researching changing masculinities in Argentina.

Robyn Lee Bio

Robyn Lee is a PhD candidate in Social and Political Thought at York University. Her interdisciplinary research examines ethics, theories of subjectivity and embodiment, feminist theory, and contemporary political theory. Her dissertation is entitled Breastfeeding: ethics, poetics, and politics.

Gigi McNamara

Gigi McNamara is a PhD candidate in Mass Communication at the Pennsylvania State University. She has taught previously at Duquesne University and Lock Haven University. Her research interests include exploring issues relating to gender, media and commodification and has presented papers at the National Women's Studies Association and the Association for Education in Journalism and Mass Communication.

Beth Nardella

Beth Nardella is an Assistant Professor of writing in the School of Medicine at West Virginia University. In addition to teaching, she is currently researching girlhood in the United States. She holds an MFA from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and an MA from West Virginia University.

Susan Rensing

Susan Rensing teaches History and Women's Studies at the University of Wisconsin Oshkosh. Her current research analyzes how eugenics was used to re-conceptualize romantic love, reproduction, and the institution of marriage in the early 20th century and how resistance to these changes motivated a backlash to first-wave feminism in America.